Paris, France

Today was amazing! I finally got to experience the magic of Paris, and it did not disappoint. From the moment I arrived I knew that I would fall in love with Paris. But what truly stole my heart was stumbling upon this French Food Fair. It was like stumbling upon a hidden treasure of culinary delights. As I walked through, I smelled the most amazing aromas, each smelling better than the last.

I have always heard the stereotypes that French people were rude but everyone I met was warm & welcoming. From the vendors at the booths to other locals at the fair everyone was genuinely kind. Made me remember that stereotypes aren't always true.

And oh, the food! I wanted to try as many dishes as possible and I definitely did. The escargot was surprisingly good along with the duck confit. I savored every bite and wanted seconds at many booths. I loved the ratatouille, gratin dauphinois and beef bourgignon. Obviously I got a taste of France's best dishes.

Shocker! My fav dishes were the desserts. Had to buy a few macarons & devoured my nutella and strawberry crepe. I am still thinking about those desserts

Looking back to yesterday, I am so glad I walked thru that fair. Since this was my first trip it makes me so excited for the ones I have soon!

Paris, you have my heart. And I hate to say goodbye but I will remember yesterday forever.

Until next time...
